

2.4 College or uni in your country

Dear Tony

I get that you want to enrol in a Belgian university. They are indeed way cheaper. The average price to go to a university in Belgium is around 1500 euro's a year. There are a lot of good university city's in Belgium, but which one is best for you depends on what kind of study you are planning to do. You could study in Gent, Antwerp, Louvain, Brussels or Hasselt. There are universities in other city's too of course, but those cities are known for their universities, and they have multiple!

The student flats aren't that cheap, but yet again that depends on where you are housed. If you are able to get your hands on a student flat that is offered by your university, they cost about 300 – 400 euros a month. If you have to look for one on the private market, they will probably cost around 400 – 600 euros a month.

It is possible to follow lectures in English, but this also depends on what kind of study you are following. For example the course of IT is available in English, and I am sure that there are more courses that are also available in English, but I can't name all of them. You'll have to do some research about that yourself.

On the weekends a lot of students that are housed in student flats go home. But the ones that don't mostly enjoy nights out at café's, or parties in nearby bars. The student nightlife in Belgium is really fun, and there's lot's of drinking involved (obviously :D).

I hope that you are able to work with the information I have provided. Have fun studying in Belgium!

Kind regards

Evi
